ALWAYS HEROES READY

Human nature glows with a light inspiring to heart and soul in every such tragedy as the Eastland horror.

Always there are heroes ready to risk their lives to save others. In every such test the spirit of self-sacrifice is as fine and strong as it ever was in any golden age the romancers in prose and verse have imagined.

Since the war began it has often been said that the men of all of the nations engaged have displayed wonderful courage and fortitude. This ought not to cause the slightest surprise. The records of the tragedies of peace have proved, at all times, that heroism has been as common and as capable of sublime deeds as it ever was.

It is impossible to give serious consideration to the news of the day in this country without finding much evidence that America is rich in men who are ready to give up their lives at any hour when duty calls. They are to be found in such numbers that there cannot be the least doubt of ability of the republic to enlist volunteers in vast armies whenever they may be needed for the supreme test of war.

If the government were as ready as the material of which soldiers are made it would all be a matter of drill and organization. If the arms and equipment, the officers and the stores, were within reach the creation of big armies, in the time of need, would be a much more hopeful task than it could be under existing conditions.

Cleveland Leader.

You can make a little truth go a long way by stretching it.
